4. Log files

Log files: A log file is a computer-generated data file that contains contextualised information about usage patterns, activities, and operations within an operating system, application, server or another device, and is the primary data source for network observability. It can help identify why a website is being slow.

IP Address: IP address stands for 'internet protocol address' which is an identifying number that is associated with a specific computer or computer network.

URL: URL stands for 'Uniform Resource Locator' and is the address of a webpage. People may also refer to it as a 'link' on your search bar.

Referrer URL: Referrer URL tells us which webpage you were 'referred' from. For example, clicking on a link on another website that takes you to our website.

Aggregate data: Aggregate data is when huge amounts of data from multiple sources are summarised and organised into data reports.

4.1 Every time someone visits our website a log file is generated on our database. Log files record:

- The time and date of your visit
- The files that were requested
- Your IP (Internet Protocol) address
- The referrer URL (if provided) and the browser version

We collect this information to help us diagnose problems, administer our systems and to audit the geographical make-up of users along with how they have arrived at our site using information obtained from the referrer URL.

4.2 We do not normally link IP addresses to anything personally identifiable, which means that you remain anonymous even though we include your IP address in our aggregate information. However, we can and will attempt to use IP addresses to identify a user when we feel it is necessary to enforce compliance with our terms and conditions, or to protect our services and other users.
